

Acknowledgment for Study 11: Adolescent Drug Dependence

The Genetics of Adolescent Drug Dependence study (GADD) is an ongoing collaboration among investigators currently at three sites (University of Colorado Denver, University of California San Diego, University of Colorado at Boulder) in the United States, with initial participation of a fourth site at the University of Pittsburgh. The study includes the following universities, principal investigators, and grant support from NIDA:

University of Colorado Denver: Thomas Crowley, MD (Principal Investigator, till 2007, DA012845); Christian Hopfer, MD, (PI, DA012191); University of California, San Diego: Sandra Brown, PhD, (PI, DA 012845, till 2007, and DA021905 since 2008); University of Colorado at Boulder: Michael Stallings, PhD, (PI, till 2007, DA012845); John Hewitt, PhD (PI, since 2008, DA012845); University of Pittsburgh: Duncan Clark, MD, (PI, till 2003, DA012845).